Anti Wrinkle “Toxin” is injected, using a fine needle, into the targeted muscle to temporarily block the nerve signal, resulting in weakening of the muscle action which can result in an improvement in the appearance of lines of facial expression.

Toxin can only treat lines of expression (dynamic lines) and lines that are present when the muscle is not contracted, and the face is relaxed (static lines) generally do not improve with anti-wrinkle injections.

Dermal filler injections are administered using a sterile small needle, a cannula or both. The syringe will contain a clear gel like substance, which consists of a water-based carrier gel, hyaluronic acid, and may contain lidocaine, which is a local anaesthetic to make the treatment more comfortable.

Hyaluronic acid is a naturally occurring substance, which is a major component of our skin and has a function in wound repair, hydration, and cell to cell communication. Hyaluronic acid dermal fillers are extremely 'hydrophilic' or water loving. When they are injected, they boost the skins volume, so the area becomes revitalised and volumised. By placing the dermal filler in specific anatomical positions, this can also create a lifting effect. Adding volume helps to address issues such as volume loss, laxity and sagging of the skin, having a positive effect on lines and wrinkles. They can also be injected directly beneath lines to help soften and improve them.

Profhilo® consists of one of the highest concentrations of hyaluronic acid (HA) available in any aesthetic product. One of the main characteristics of hyaluronic acid is that it effectively binds water like a sponge. Profhilo® has been around since 2015, so it is a relatively new treatment, but has a low risk of complications.

Profhilo® is a revolutionary technology that delivers an anti-ageing treatment into the skin of your face, neck, and other areas of the body. The low molecular weight portion is responsible for hydration and stimulating the formation of new collagen and elastin within the skin whereas the high molecular weight component provides support and a scaffolding action. Due to thermal stabilisation, the pure hyaluronic acid remains in the skin for around 28 days, however the slow release of HA stimulates 4 different types of collagen and elastin for more lasting results. Patients can expect increased firmness, elasticity, and an overall improved quality of the skin with the effects lasting about six months.

CHEMICAL PEELS

A chemical peel is a minimally invasive procedure where a solution is applied to the skin for exfoliation and to help improve a variety of skin concerns. Chemical exfoliation has been used throughout history for over 3,500 years. Chemical peels may contain a single ingredient or a blend of products to treat a range of skin issues.

There are a vast number of chemicals that can be used for skin peeling, some natural and some synthetic, targeting different depths of the skin and for different indications. Despite being described as a chemical peel or a skin peel, many modern-day treatments do not actually cause any peeling of the skin or very minor peeling.

Different brands of chemical peels use different ingredients to achieve the desired results. Results of a chemical peel depend on the product used, the strength of the peel, how much is applied and how long it remains on the skin. Peels can target pigmentation, fine lines, large pores, and scarring.

CIT is a cosmetic procedure that involves breaking the skin with tiny sterilised needles. The small wounds cause your body to make more collagen and elastin, which heal your skin and help you look younger. Additional serums are added to the skin as the microneedling prepares channels to allow the serum such as hyaluronic acid to be absorbed.
